The author astutely presents her experience of growing up through the eyes of her innocent yet critical younger self. She takes a humorous and naïve approach to raise important questions about social, political and religious beliefs in Iran. She proceeds to explore the themes of identity and the differences in the cultures of her home country and Europe as a young woman living in Austria. This book is suitable for first years and above, it is very accessible but incredibly emotive and engaging. Satrapi allows us to share a range of raw, funny and emotional moments with her and teaches us to value liberty and peace.
